

Encourage students to focus on what they can control

When students focus on what they can't change, they tend to feel helpless, demotivated and/or frustrated. Focusing on what they can influence is better, but can still lead to an increase in nerves.

Focusing on what they can control leads to enhanced motivation and confidence.

